

The Hub of the Home

The majority of us who have a live-in kitchen will admit that we spend more time in there than in any other room in the house. It is because it is such a versatile space – we can lounge on a chair and read, watch TV, take our time cooking, chat, keep an eye on the children, entertain friends – it is a practical working area and a family relaxation space rolled into one.

It is no surprise that kitchen extensions make up over 50% of the hardwood garden rooms designed and built by David Salisbury. Each one is meticulously designed for each customer, creating an enjoyable living space that blends seamlessly with the house.

An orangery is the most popular style of kitchen extension. The natural light flooding in via large glass doors and attractive lantern roofs overhead give the room an airy feel, plus the solidity of the build means that it feels like part of the house rather than an addition to it. An orangery kitchen will blend practicality and useability with elegance in equal measure, with the added advantage of wonderful views of the garden all year round.

David Salisbury

For more information about this press release and digital imagery, contact Tracy Bates or Belinda Robinson at Esprit PR Ltd tel: 01428 714546 or email belinda@espritpr.com